

James Lake Cabin - January 21 - 22

Judy and Di skied the 6km into James Lake Cabin in the Turtle Mountains. The trail was in really good condition!

We met a few acquaintances along the way, which was great!

Judy's backpack got the better of her a couple of times, and ended up praying to the Snow Gods.

The cabin was still warm from the last occupants, which was lovely.

As we settled in, it was apparent there was no axe and only a hatchet. That was ok for making kindling - but not much else!

We had another short ski to take in some wonderful hills.

Our night was a hot one! That was good wood and the woodstove was throwing out incredible amounts of heat. So much - Judy had to open the cabin door!

The next morning, Judy had developed two black eyes.....who dunnit?

We skied back to the parking lot, where Di met up with Pam Little and a couple of other friends. She had another two nights at the cabin!

The trail crew in the Turtle Mountains do a fantastic job at maintaining the trails - Kudos to them!
